

Editor's Note

2011 will see our journal entering its fifth year of operation, along with our pride to have served quite a number of researchers around the world in disseminating their work. We are glad our journal can be an outlet for their varied talents and interests and we thank them for choosing our journal to publish their work.

Without all the honoray referees, however, we would not have fared this much either. So we also thank them all for their indispensable service. Their names have been listed on our webpage in acknowledgement of their contribution.

The major problem is that our journal is run on a non-profit basis. This unfortunately means that we cannot grow as much as we want to grow or do as much as we wish to do to serve all our enthusiastic contributors in a satisfactory manner. The time factor is now our big issue stemming from a limited number of personnel that try to serve while maintaining an acceptable standard of a journal. Anyhow, with the possibility of more volunteers we are hoping that things will become better this year.
